Temple jewelleries an authentic and elegant part of the south indian culture

Temple jewellery is a traditional form of Indian jewellery that originated in South India, particularly in the Tamil Nadu region. It was initially used to adorn the idols of gods and goddesses in temples, hence the name "temple jewellery." Over time, it became popular for use by classical dancers and brides. The designs often feature intricate carvings and motifs inspired by deities, goddesses, and nature, such as peacocks, flowers, and elephants. Traditional patterns include Lakshmi (the goddess of wealth), Lord Krishna, and other Hindu deities. It is often worn during weddings, festivals, and classical dance performances such as Bharatanatyam and Kuchipudi.

It symbolizes tradition, cultural heritage, and often has spiritual significance.
